No problem. I had already made the Annan reference vaguer, so it's fine. Also figured out that the map was separate. And I phrased it in such a way to say that it was presented to the Security Council before the pullout (which, as far as I can tell, is true), but not saying the SC had approved it formally by the time you got out.
I've also slightly amended the details of your account of the Mofaz/Ashkenazi discussions before the pullout. From a book on the subject, I'm assuming you did in fact approve the pullout for the night of May 22 – as described – and then pushed it back 24 hours after Mofaz informed you that Gabi needed that extra time.
Generally, I've rewritten the Syria negotiations material as you suggested. Think it holds together fine now, but suggest you have another read before the final edit – after we've done Chs 21-24 and finished this stage.
Will send the draft to you later today.
Best

We got it separately, a day or two before. From another office on the UN. I can check the name. Ideally we would wait for approval of full completion which took some six weeks afterwards. But under circumstances I felt we are already on safe ground.
